Course prerequisites
Contents	Hermeneutics of passage and landscape The course is divided into three parts. In the first one, after an introduction to the meaning and methodology of 'theoretical' discipline, some parts of Thus Spoke Zarathustra by Nietzsche will be addressed, and will be read as an example of hermeneutic textual and symbolic analysis (e. g. the question of the relationship between thought / existence / emotion; or the relationship between physical / physiological location and landscape). In a second part, immediately intertwined in counterpoint to the first, some authors will be addressed who in the twentieth century revolutionized the way of reading the philosophy / geography relationship and who offer important ideas for a reinterpretation of the link between hermeneutics and landscape; in particular G. Deleuze, G. Clément and F. Jullien. This 'teaching unit' will also be conducted through cooperative workshops, where some textual parts of contemporary Italian authors (who have worked on geophilosophy and / or landscape) will be read. Workshops, carried out in person, will be exempt from the final exam, as will the proposals for research-action seminars foreseen in the third part of the course: interdisciplinary laboratories among which students can choose more personalized paths: a more historical-civic one (active citizenship practices), or a dialogue between Sciences and Humanities, or experiences with other languages (cinema, art, music).
